Sampajañña—the Constant Thorough Understanding of Impermanence

Vipassana Research Institute

In this paper, we will discuss how sampajañña (or sampajño) is explained by the Buddha in the Suttas and how the term can be correctly translated into English.

Whenever the Buddha was asked to describe sati (mindfulness or awareness), his explanation invariably included the term sampajañña.

*Katamā ca, bhikkhave, sammā-sati? Idha, bhikkhave, bhikkhu kāye kāyānupassī viharati ātāpi sampajño satinā, vineyya loke abhiṣijñā-domanassāni.*¹

And what, meditators, is right awareness? Here, a meditator dwells ardently, with constant thorough understanding and right awareness, observing the body in the body, having removed craving and aversion towards this world (of mind and matter).

From this it becomes evident that according to the Buddha, whenever there is sammā-sati or satipaṭṭhāna, it is always with sampajañña. That means it is with pāññā (wisdom). Otherwise it is mere sati, which is mere remembrance or awareness.

In the Sutta Piṭaka, the Buddha gave two explanations of the term sampajañña. In the Saṅyutta-nikāya the Buddha defines sampajño as follows:

*Kathaṇca, bhikkhave, bhikkhu sampajjano hoti? Idha, bhikkhave, bhikkhuno viditā vedanā uppañjanti, viditā upattiṭhāhanti, viditā abhbatthānā gacchAnti; viditā saññā uppañjanti, viditā upattiṭhāhanti, viditā abhbatthānā gacchAnti; viditā vitakka uppañjanti, viditā upattiṭhāhanti, viditā abhbatthānā gacchAnti. Evam kho, bhikkhave, bhikkhuno sampajjano hoti.*²

And how, meditators, does a meditator understand thoroughly? Herein, meditators, a meditator knows sensations arising in him, knows their persisting, and knows their vanishing; he knows perceptions arising in him, knows their persisting, and knows their vanishing; he knows each initial application (of the mind on an object) arising in him, knows its persisting, and knows its vanishing. This, meditators, is how a meditator understands thoroughly.

In the above statement, it becomes clear that one is sampajjano only when one realizes the characteristic of impermanence, and that too on the basis of experience of sensation (viditā vedanā). If this is not realized through vedanā, then it is merely an intellectualization, as our fundamental contact with the world is based on sensation. It is through sensation that direct experience occurs. The statement further indicates that sampajjano lies in experiencing the impermanence of vedanā, vitakka (the initial application of the mind on an object) and saññā (perception). Here we should note that impermanence of vedanā is to be realized first because according to the Buddha:
Vedanā-samosaraṇa sabbe dhāmannā.3

Everything that arises in the mind is accompanied by sensation.

The second explanation given by the Buddha of sampajaññā emphasizes that it must be continuous. He states:

And how, meditators does a meditator understand thoroughly? Again, meditators, a meditator in going forwards and backwards understands impermanence thoroughly, in looking straight ahead and sideways understands impermanence thoroughly, in bending and stretching understands impermanence thoroughly, in wearing the robes and carrying the bowl understands impermanence thoroughly, in chewing and drinking, eating and savouring understands impermanence thoroughly, in attending to the calls of nature understands impermanence thoroughly, in walking, standing, sitting, sleeping and waking, speaking and remaining silent understands impermanence thoroughly.

The same passage has been repeated in other suttas, including the section on sampajaññā under Kāyānupassanā in the Mahāsatiyatiṭṭhāna-sutta.

The emphasis on the continuity of sampajaññā is very clear. One should develop constant thorough understanding of impermanence in whatever one does: in walking forward and backward, in looking straight and sideways, in bending and stretching, in wearing robes and so on. In sitting, standing and even in sleeping one has to experience constant thorough understanding of impermanence. This is sampajaññā.

With proper understanding of the teaching of the Buddha, it becomes clear that if this continuous sampajaññā consists only of the thorough understanding of the processes of walking, eating and other activities of the body, then it is merely sati. If, however, the constant thorough understanding includes the characteristic of arising and passing away of vedanā while the meditator is performing these activities, then this is painā. This is what the Buddha wanted people to practise.

The Buddha describes this more specifically in a passage from the Aṅguttara-nikāya, using language that is bound to bring to mind the sampajañna-pābbu of the Mahāsatiyatiṭṭhāna-sutta:

Yataṃ ca yataṃ tiṣṭhe, yataṃ acche yataṃ saye, yataṃ samāñayo bhikkhu, yataṃ regam apacīnoti, uddhaṃ tiriyanti apacīnaṃ, yācita jāgato gati, samacekkhita ca dhammānāṃ khandanān udayabbayantu.5

Whether the meditator walks or stands or sits or lies, whether he bends or stretches, above, across, backwards, whatever his course in the world, he observes the arising and passing away of the aggregates.

Thus the emphasis is on the continuity of awareness of anicca (impermanence) with the base of body sensation. The Buddha frequently stressed that the meditator should not lose the thorough understanding of impermanence even for a moment: sampajaññan na riñcati.6 For a meditator who follows his advice on the proper practice of Vipassana, being sampajañno without any interruption, the Buddha gives the following assurance: either the meditator will attain the highest stage (arahata) or the penultimate stage (anāgāmi).7

Every language, however rich it may be, has its limitations and we cannot expect even the richest of languages to be capable of giving precise equivalents to the technical Pāli words used by the Buddha. If the term sampajañña is translated too concisely into English its meaning can be lost. It has usually been translated as “clear comprehension,” “bare comprehension,” etc. Superficially these translations appear to be correct. Some have taken this to mean that one must merely have clear comprehension of bodily activities. The limitations of this translation may have had the effect of misleading some meditators on the path of Dhamma. The Buddha clearly emphasized the thorough understanding of anicca in all bodily and mental activities. Therefore, to understand the term sampajañña, we have translated it as: “The constant thorough understanding of impermanence.” It is felt that this translation conveys more fully the precise meaning of the term used by the Buddha.

Notes:

1. Dīgha-nikāya, VRI 2.234; PTS 2.314
2. Saṁyutta-nikāya VRI 3.255-6; PTS 5.180-1
3. Ariyuttara-nikāya, VRI 3.159; PTS 4.339
4. Dīgha-nikāya VRI 2.75; PTS 2.95.
5. Khuddaka-nikāya, Itivuttaka, Catukkanipāta VRI 84; PTS 120
6. Saṁyutta-nikāya VRI 2.203; PTS 4.206
7. Dīgha-nikāya VRI 2.235; PTS 2.314